

VAN ZORGE REPORT ON INDONESIA

COMMENTARY & ANALYSIS ON INDONESIAN POLITICS AND ECONOMICS

INSIDE ISSUE V/10:

FROM THE EDITOR..... 3

ELECTION 2004: 4

The Power of Political Islam
Although Indonesia's population is overwhelmingly Muslim, the Islamic political parties are unlikely to dominate the political arena in the near to medium-term future. This article looks at the electoral potential of the five major Islamic parties due to contest the 2004 general election, and assesses their prospects in both the legislative and presidential polls.

INTERVIEW: EEP SAEFULLOH FATAH 17

“Megawati is Not That Difficult to Defeat”
Respected political observer, Eep Saefulloh Fatah, asserts that while most Islamic parties are unlikely to increase their share of the vote in the next legislative election, they are still confident of mustering enough support to mount a strong challenge against the incumbent, Megawati Soekarnoputri.

LABOR: CHRIS MANNING: 20

Employment-Friendly Labor Policies
Indonesia is at a crossroads in its development of labor policy, with important breakthroughs being made in helping to affirm basic workers' rights. However, some of these changes could be costly, and could hamper the creation of 'better' jobs and higher living standards in Indonesia.
